Letter from La Grande

November 7th 1865.

FRIEND OREGONIAN:

On last week we penned you a few items from Eagle precinct, and promised you additional ones from this point, which we will now endeavor to furnish.

Substantial improvements in this city move steadily on, and the confidence in the general resources of the country increases every day. The [illegible] characterized by a regular advancement in point of [illegible] and improvements of a permanent character. The flouring mill on Catharine Creek, at that [illegible] the fine appearance of which we noticed in a previous note, is now in complete [illegible] and giving general satisfaction. The people of Union are not so absorbed in business as to forget the claims of education, and hence [illegible] of a convenient and [illegible] for the accommodation of the young and [illegible] teacher to take charge of their instruction. We make special mention of this fact [illegible] of the general neglect of educational facilities in newly settled localities.

The thoroughfare leading from this place to the mines is literally lined with heavy freight wagons loaded with produce and machinery for the various mining districts of the Boise and Owyhee country. One novel feature of the freight in question was a steamboat—yes, a literal steamboat on dry land, but which will soon be launched in its adapted element, and will afford improved accommodations for the traveling public (on Snake river) between Old Ferry and Salmon Falls, and the thanks of the public are due to Col. Ruckles for the origination and furtherance of an enterprise so beneficial to the comfort and welfare of travelers, and also to the progress and development of the country.

This town still wears a business face and is decidedly upward in its tendency.

The County Court opened session this morning, Judge Argersinger presiding. The Circuit Court convenes next week, and from the "signs of the times," there will be considerable business for the legal fraternity for a fortnight to come.

In noticing items of change in business, we find that Dr Henley, Mr Deal and F. M. Mo[illegible] have purchased the large drug store of Messrs. Dr Stockton and Payton, and will continue the same business without change of programme.

The Eagle Mountain Quartz Mining Company of this place have recently effected a complete and permanent organization, and being legally incorporated will send their agents, Mr. E. B. Patterson and Hall, to New York forthwith, for the purpose of disposing of a part of their stock and securing the requisite machinery to develop and work the remainder. We understand that this company owns several thousand feet in a number of rich lodes, and the enterprise, no doubt, will prove a success to those originating and developing it.

The farmers have done well in this valley the present season, and are more contented with their prospects than heretofore. Real estate here has, and is in a measure is now, held in estimation far below its real value, on account of a want of confidence in the perpetuity of the mines; but now under the exhilarating influence of the rich discoveries made in [illegible] in neighboring localities, real estate property has assumed an upward tendency and is destined ere long to surprise even the natives. THREAT OF JEFF. DAVIS.—It will result that every trial like that of Payne and his associates, and now of Wirtz, has a direct and preparatory bearing on the case of Jefferson Davis. That he was cognizant of every atrocity cannot be denied—indeed, it is not denied. His own silence is not that of wounded pride, but a studied, and, doubtless a counseled silence, and is, perhaps, significant of his apprehension that his knowledge of, if not his direct complicity in, these cruelties will be established. You may take any of the chief criminals of the rebellion who deliberately violated the rules of war, and it will be shown that they had the sanction of Davis. The confessions of Beale and Kennedy, who were executed at New York, proved that they acted "by authority."

The attempt to convey the plague into our great cities by Blackburn, the devilish invention of Harris and Oldham, the composition of Prof. McCullough, the fiendish barbarity of Wirtz, who seemed to revel in the murder of his victims, and in the success of his contrivances; the robberies and raids of the Northern borders, like the plan to fire the theaters and hotels of New York and other cities, were only parts of one grand system, and were as well known to Jefferson Davis as the mutilations at Bull Run, the torpedoes at Williamsburg, the horrible agonies of the prisoners at the Libby and Belle Isle, and the nameless infamies upon the colored prisoners. Gradually and surely the warp and the woof of testimony is being prepared, and when it is completed will be closely and compactly woven into the conviction of the greatest traitor since the days of Judas Iscariot.—Philadelphia Press.

THE NEW RAILROAD AT THE CASCADES.—The last term of the District Court of Clark county, Washington Territory, closed on the 28th of October. During the session the case of D. F. Bradford and others against the Middle Cascade Portage Company came up for hearing. It seems that certain parties are engaged in building a railroad from the Middle Block House to the head of the Cascades, and their line crosses certain property belonging to Mr. Bradford and others. Having a charter from the Washington Territory Legislature, with the usual power to take and appraise lands and assess damages, the Middle Cascade Portage Company procured the appointment of appraisers from the District Court, and proceeded to assess the sum to be paid. This was fixed at $1,000, and Mr. D. F. Bradford and associates appealed to the District Court. In court they refused to join issue on the facts, and plead irregularity of the award of the appraisers and the invalidity of the defendants' charter. The Court sustained the appraisers and the validity of the charter. The case goes up to the Supreme Court of Washington Territory.—Vancouver [illegible].

PREPARED FOR THEM.—Wells, Fargo & Co. are running their treasure express to Umatilla with a full knowledge of the danger they incur from robbery, and with abundant precaution to meet it when necessary. By every stage that carries any considerable amount of treasure they send two or more messengers armed in the best manner that experience can suggest. It is also understood that if attacked they will fight. [illegible] must [illegible] come back [illegible] with any [illegible] as being [illegible] by surprise, but that is hardly necessary, for the character of the boys is such as to leave no doubt on that point. They will fight and die [illegible] any number of road [illegible] that give them a show and come out best [illegible]. They don't have any fear of being robbed [illegible] say the least, and we have little fear that they will be attacked at all, though it seems very [illegible] time for another demonstration of the kind.—Walla Walla Statesman.

RAISINS.—Touching the matter of California raisins, the Alta calls attention to the fact that ten thousand pounds of California raisins had been exhibited for sale in that city. That paper says:

We must own them for first quality fresh Malaga raisins, but learned that they were produced this season at B. N. Bugbey's Natoma Vineyard, four miles from Folsom. They are produced from grapes of the Hungarian variety, known as [illegible] which are excellent for table use. Drying into raisins, or making wine. These raisins are in all respects equal to those of Malaga, and sell at the same price. The reason is now why we should not in time produce all the raisins needed for consumption in California and in other parts of the United States as well. Little by little we are becoming independent of [illegible] countries of the world, and preparing to become exporters rather than importers of [illegible] of many articles which cannot be produced elsewhere in the United States.

A female refugee (white) who had a large family dependent on her at Memphis, Tennessee, and who had only one calico dress, excited the sympathy of some gentlemen, who made a collection for her, which amounted to fifteen dollars. She was profuse in her expressions of gratitude, and at once repaired to a dry goods store, where she paid thirteen dollars for a lace collar!

A Vindication of Secretary Stanton. Letter from General Hitchcock.

General Hitchcock, late United States Commissioner for the exchange of prisoners, has written to the Washington Chronicle a long letter defending the Secretary of War against accusations made in relation to exchanges of prisoners of war. This letter is supplementary to one of August 21st on the same subject, and is called for, General Hitchcock says, because the latter does not appear to have satisfied certain individuals who seem determined to give effect to their accusations against Stanton by the force of strenuous repetitions of them. General Hitchcock says:

It [illegible] the official records of the Adjutant General's Department will be published, from which there [illegible] several items to be considered in [illegible] this subject. First, the entire number of [illegible] troops in the service of the United States who were taken [illegible] the Government of the United States was [illegible] of their [illegible] the principles upon which exchange should be [illegible]. Secondly, the [illegible] number of colored troops of the United States who fell into the hands of the enemy, which number I have reason to believe did not fall much, if any, below five thousand men, not to speak of the proportion of officers on duty with them. This is the rough estimate made by Colonel Foster, of the Adjutant General's department in this city, who has charge of the Military Bureau for Colored Troops.

With regard to the point that the Secretary of War refused to make exchange man for man, officer for officer according to grade, I make the following statement: that in no instance within my knowledge did Stanton refuse to acquiesce in any proposition looking to that result. There is not in any office, nor have I ever seen, such a proposition ever made by Judge Ould or any of his superiors. This is not only true emphatically as a protection against the accusations levelled at Stanton, but the precise contrary is the truth. Stanton has not only been willing, but anxious to make the exchanges referred to, as I have abundant means of showing by indisputable documents.

The aim and purpose of Judge Ould was to draw from us all the rebel prisoners we held, in exchange for the white troops of the United States held as prisoners in the South, persistently refusing to exchange the colored troops until a very late date, when, to carry a special purpose, he receded so far as to agree to exchange free colored men, leaving the general principle where it was by his side against the just claims of the large body of colored prisoners held in the South. The only order sustaining the delivery of rebel prisoners ever known to me was given by the President himself, and that was done the moment it was known that the rebels themselves—I mean their President—had himself virtually set aside the cartel for exchanges, in order, as Davis declared, to subject a certain class of Federal officers to be tried as criminals before Southern State Courts, under State laws, for the punishment of the crime of exciting servile insurrection. If any one is disposed to object to that order, let him, if he dare, assail the memory of the sainted author of it.

At that time the rebels held more prisoners than we, but as soon as General Grant made prisoners of the garrison at Vicksburg the rebels became largely indebted on the score of prisoners, and from that moment we on our side were anxious to make exchanges man for man, though constantly asserting the principle that colored troops, when captured, should be treated as prisoners of war, not as an act of justice to individuals alone, whether many or few, but as both just and politic with regard to the entire body of troops who, by the fortune of war, were liable to capture. It is a very narrow view to decide this question upon a mere consideration of the precise number of prisoners at any one time in the hands of the enemy. The principle of protection was due to the entire body of troops employed by the Government.

The rebels, on their part, were opposed to making exchanges man for man, after we held an excess over them, because it was their object to draw from us that excess to place it in the army of General Lee, without returning to us an effective body of men in exchange. They insisted upon this on the ground that the cartel required it, although when they thought it was to their interest they did not hesitate to violate the cartel, thus absolving us from the observance of it.

Artemus Ward, in the prospectus of his Irving Hall entertainment in New York, tempts the people to come and see him with the following inducements:

The festivities will be commenced by the pianist, a gentleman who used to board in the same street with Gottschalk. The man who kept the boarding house remembers it distinctly. The overture will consist of a medley of airs, including the touching new ballads "Dear Sister is there any Pie in the House?" "My Gentle Father, have you any Fine Cut about you?" "Mother, is the battle o'er, and is it safe for Me to come Home from Canada?" and (by request of several [illegible] who haven't heard it,) "Tramp, tramp, tramp, the Boys are Marching." While the enraptured ear drinks in this sweet music (we pay our pianist nine dollars a week and find him,) the eye will be enchained by the magnificent green baize covering of the panorama. This green baize cost forty cents a yard at Stewart's store. It was bought in deference to the present popularity of "The Wearing of the Green." We shall keep up with the times if we spend the last dollar our friends have got.

JUAREZ.—A correspondent of the Chicago Republican gives the following personal description of Juarez, the President of Mexico:

Senor Juarez seems to be in the neighborhood of fifty, is of low stature, stoutly built, but though broad in proportion to his height, not corpulent. He is not much taller than the late Senator Douglas, though much better formed. His face is Indian in every feature; there is no mistake about it. I should have recognized him anywhere as an undeniable Pueblo. He has a good, clear, steady eye, indicative of self possession and quiet but keen penetration. He has a well formed, well-developed head. His hair is the straight, coarse, thick, blue black hair of the Pueblo. His nose is aquiline and [illegible]. His mouth is the curveless (and, if I may venture the expression), lipless, tightly closed Indian mouth. It is very indicative of quiet but deep determination.

NOBLE AND WITTY REPLY.—In 1661 Philip I. sent the young Constable de Castile to Rome to congratulate Sextus V. on his advancement. The Pope said, "Are there so few men in Spain that your king sends me one without a beard?" "Sir," said the fierce Spaniard, "if his majesty possessed the least idea that you imagined merit laid in a beard, he would have deputed a goat to you, and not a gentleman."

OFFICIAL PAPER OF THE STATE

WEDNESDAY MORNING, NOV. 15, 1865

The Rebellion in Jamaica

Of the cause of the present insurrection in Jamaica we have no precise information, but the inference is that it arose out of political differences between the blacks themselves, in which the whites have become involved. This will appear probable when we consider that the larger part of the population of the island is composed of negroes, their numbers exceeding those of the whites at the rate of thirty to one, and that with a great a disparity as this, the war can hardly be a strife simply and exclusively between the different races. Besides, the Government of Jamaica is of such a character that its administration is likely to lead to difficulties, especially when a people are ignorant, passionate and unqualified for self government as is the case with those of that island. Their Governor is appointed by the crown, and the Legislative Assembly is chosen by the people themselves. It is not unlikely that the inhabitants of Jamaica were divided into political factions, such as are sure to have an existence among an illiterate people possessing their form of government, and that out of these differences, and by means of the animosities thus engendered, the present insurrection has sprung up.

Prior to the emancipation of the slaves in 1838, several contests arose between them and their masters. Some of these revolts were bloody—the slaves being brought with difficulty to submission. But since freedom was proclaimed throughout the island, there has been no antagonism between the races, and consequently no insurrections or wars until now. This fact would also indicate that the present struggle is, primarily, between the blacks themselves.

We fully expect to hear the news from Jamaica dilated on by a portion of our public press, and the atrocities that have lately been perpetrated by the negroes of that island, dwelt upon with doleful prolixity and often cited as examples of what we may expect from our own colored population. But granting that the negroes of Jamaica have rebelled, they have done no more than some of our own countrymen did five years ago. Granting that they have treated their captives with monstrous cruelty, they have done no more than the Southern rebels did. Hence the rebellion in Jamaica proves little, so far, against negroes that has not been proved already against white men. The South is constantly sending up a cry of apprehended danger from its colored population, but the reports raised have not yet been substantiated by a single hostile demonstration on the part of the negroes. From present indications it seems that there will be no insurrection among the blacks of the South, unless the whites provoke it. So that those who cite the scenes of Jamaica as a specimen of what we may look for at home, are not very felicitous in drawing their illustrations.

STILL ADHERING TO SLAVERY.—A while ago when the people of Mississippi were filled with a salutary fear of the power of the Government, they pretended to be very submissive, assumed to be extremely loyal, revoked the ordinance of secession, repudiated the rebel State debt, ratified the Constitutional Amendment in their Convention, and recanted, or seemed to recant from all their errors. In the State Convention the Unionists—if half hearted rebels like Sharkey, may be called by this name—apparently had a majority. Provision was made by this body for holding an election for members of the Legislature. In this election few except secessionists were chosen. A Legislature composed of such material as this, would fail, of course, to carry out the original plan of reconstruction. Made bold by having their proceedings invested with the forms of law, and rendered intolerant to an unusual degree by being made the recipients of favors which they had not the nobleness of mind to appreciate or be grateful for, they proceeded at once to place their State in opposition to the policy of the Government—commencing a career that must soon result in a direct collision with the authorities. The Legislature refuses to ratify the Constitutional Amendment, although the State was pledged to do so. Further, it has enacted a code of laws the result of whose operation will be to oppress the freedmen far more than if they were still slaves. The St. Louis Democrat thus speaks of the situation in Mississippi. The rebel Legislature has since made made matters still worse than they were at the time the Democrat refers to:

If the reports from all sources, respecting the action of the Mississippi Convention, are correct that body has virtually decreed the re-establishment of slavery in the State. The other Southern State Conventions have been modest enough to [illegible] base work to the Legislatures, but the Mississippi Convention was too impatient. Three so-called ordinances were passed by the Convention. One denies the negroes the right to testify against the whites, either in civil or criminal trials. Another withholds from them the privilege of bringing suits against whites. A third declares that all blacks who are not in regular employment shall be considered vagrants and sold to labor by the State. These ordinances may well be called diabolical inventions for the purpose of nullifying the emancipation proclamation and the ordinance passed by the State Convention itself.

ATTEMPTS AT ABUSE.—The maniac who writes for the Virginia Union says of the descendants of the Pilgrim Fathers:

> The most cowardly of all animals, he is equally venal and ferocious, he is the worst and lowest of all the feline species, he steals, with obsequious step and fawning mein, toward his object, and when he has lulled his victim to repose, fastens upon his vitals with the fellest purpose that ever entered the breast of man or beast, he is consistent in professions of good will toward the negro but in his practices he is his direct enemy, his use for the negro has been to build upon him a Golgotha of human bones, and when he shall have carried him to be slaughtered at the ballot box, he will cry "Bless the Lord! Amen!"

Surely that fellow must have rested easier after getting rid of so much bile. The next time he is visited with such an enlargement and derangement of the spleen, we hope some Yankee will provide him with an anodyne.

NEVADA ELECTION.—The election in Nevada has resulted in a complete Union victory. Hon D. R. Ashley is elected to Congress by twelve hundred majority. But a single county in the State voted "Democratic." In the others it is said, that every Union candidate is elected. In what else do the Copperheads find so much "wormwood," as in those frequent and invariable defeats? Nevada has reaffirmed her devotion to patriot principles and we welcome the news thereof which she sends us now again, but our greatest glory is in the late achievement of the Unionists of New Jersey. Not a Northern State is now under the [illegible] of Copperhead rule. Nasby that true "Democratic" genius, will have to go to Idaho.

Not willing that each State shall manage its own affairs, the Oregon Statesman takes it upon itself to decide the general question of suffrage for all parts of the country. We greatly hope we shall not soon have negro suffrage in Oregon because we want to be spared the disgusting spectacle of seeing the politicians of the Statesman-Olympia Review sort running about over the State within six months after the enfranchisement of the blacks declaring, in order to secure the colored vote, that they have negro blood flowing in their veins.

BOILER EXPLOSION IN NEVADA.—A terrible boiler explosion occurred on the 7th inst., near Carson, Nevada. The Gazette says the boiler was thrown from its place a distance of 250 yards passing through a house on its way, utterly demolishing the building and furniture, and killing Mrs. Marion Hutchinson, its only occupant at the time.

[DISPATCHES TO THE OREGONIAN.]

DATES TO NOVEMBER 11.

The Wirtz Case—The President Refuses a Pardon

NEW YORK, Nov 10.—The order for the execution of Wirtz is exciting more remarks and so stirring the public mind to a much greater degree than did the hanging of the conspirators. This is probably due to the fact of the notice given in this instance, while in that of the former execution [illegible] than ten hours of daylight intervened between the publication of the announcement and the appearance of the [illegible] Wirtz is said to be in better spirits than at any time during his confinement. He has had a restful sleep and has a moderate appetite. He appears to show more stamina as the hours of his life approach their close. His spiritual adviser, Father Boyle, was with him during much of the afternoon and left his cell at six this afternoon. Schrade also visited him after an hour's interview of the former with President Johnson this morning. The interview is known to have been productive of nothing to indicate that Wirtz would be reprieved, though on the streets and in the hotels the popular opinion seems to be gradually settling in that conviction. President Johnson is known to have met the petition of Schrade for a commutation of sentence with kind attention and regard, but said nothing to induce a belief that Executive clemency would be extended in the Wirtz case, nor did Schrade entertain a shadow of hope.

Gen. Briscoe's Sentence

NEW YORK, Nov 11.—The following is the sentence of Gen Briscoe: "The Court does therefore sentence him, Brevet Brig. Gen. Briscoe, Colonel of the 199th Pennsylvania, to be cashiered, dishonorably discharged from the United States service, and forever disqualified from holding any office of honor or profit under the United States Government; that he forfeit pay and allowance now due or which may become due to him, and be confined at hard labor in such place as the Secretary of War may direct, for five years.

"The findings and sentence are approved and confirmed. By the high testimonials of the former good character and gallantry of Gen. Briscoe by Generals Meade, Hancock, Stoneman, Gibbon, Terry, Sickles and others, so much of the sentence as pertains to confinement is remitted.

By order of the President.

(Signed) E. D. TOWNSEND, A. A. G."

About noon Briscoe was released. He was highly elated at his escape from imprisonment, as he fully expected to be sent to the penitentiary.

Our Relations with England.

NEW YORK, November 10th.—The Times special says all reports about Cabinet discussion over the correspondence between Earl Russell and Minister Adams, are absurd; that the correspondence was in the hands of the Government several weeks before it was published, and that Secretary Seward had written a reply to Russell's last dispatch at least six weeks since. It is generally understood he informed the English Government that we shall not press the suggestion of arbitration, nor shall we consent to submit any question to the direction of a commission, unless old claims at issue between the two Governments shall be submitted. Also, it is probable that prior to sending Secretary Seward's dispatch a request was made to know what topics were intended to come before the Commission suggested by Russell, as a necessary preliminary to the acceptance or declination of it.

Death of the Brother of the President

WASHINGTON, Nov 9.—A dispatch to the Secretary of the Treasury, dated Galveston, Nov 4th announces the death of Wm Johnson, only brother of the President, from the effects of a gun-shot wound.

Execution of Wirtz.

WASHINGTON, Nov 10.—Capt Wirtz was hung between 10 and 11 o'clock this morning. On the gallows he declared his innocence, and died without exhibiting any symptoms of fear.

The Commercial's Washington special says it is suggested by leading politicians that an amendment (here the line gave out below Yreka)

Two Persons Drowned in Umpqua River.

CANYONVILLE, Nov. 13.—To day about noon, as Mr. A. Riddle, with his brother's wife and young babe, was attempting to cross the Umpqua near Oak Grove, 14 miles north of this place, the buggy capsized, drowning Mrs Riddle and child, the heavy rains within the last thirty six hours having raised the river so it was impossible to ford. The bodies have not yet been recovered. Still raining.

SELFISHNESS GONE TO SEED.—We take the following bit of nonsense from the Statesman:

["The expense of enlisting, equipping, bounties, etc., incurred by the States providing soldiers for the common defense, since the withdrawal of the U. S. regulars, at the commencement of the war, is, in our opinion, an equitable charge on the treasury of the United States a pro rata proportion to be reimbursed through said treasury by the States in rebellion, whose conduct required the outlay by Oregon. And so believing we think it is right that the Legislature, in view of the early mustering out of the Oregon Volunteers and stopping of the bounties, should take an account of those expenses, present the bill to Congress, and ask to be indemnified by the issuance to Oregon of U. S. bonds, in amount equal to the expenses and liabilities incurred by Oregon."

The idea evidently originated with ex Senator Harding, who opposed the raising of volunteers on the ground that no troops were needed in Oregon, and that the State would be bankrupted and ruined if she had to pay the bounties. It embodies more selfishness and copperheadism than any law passed by Oregon since the war commenced. Such States as New York, Pennsylvania and Ohio, furnished about 200,000 men each, and the entire loyal States of the East furnished nearly 3,000,000 men, and as they paid, in many instances, in State and county bounties, as high as eight hundred dollars to the man who can compute the hundreds and millions of dollars which the war cost them. They furnished this vast number of men, expended hundreds of millions of dollars, and incurred enormous State debts, not to protect themselves at home but to prosecute a war in which Oregon was equally interested with them, and for which she never furnished men or money. And yet Oregon can't afford to pay a small bounty for a few men to protect her own borders from Indian depredations. Wouldn't she cut a figure by "presenting the bill to Congress," and asking to be "indemnified in amount equal to the expenses and liabilities incurred by Oregon." The same persons who have clamored so much about the selfish policy of Oregon and California, are the first to propose "presenting bills to Congress," and asking to be "indemnified." They have frequently asked the same members of the Legislature who provided for raising these troops, "what would be the effect on the national finances if all the States should adopt the selfish policy of Oregon and California, and pass similar laws?" They might reply by asking "what would be the effect, etc., if all the States should adopt the selfish policy" proposed by these same liberal souls who shuddered at the very idea of selfishness, and present their bills, amounting to hundreds of millions of dollars, to Congress to be "indemnified." Consistency where are you!

We find the above conclusive reply to one of the Statesman's absurd paragraphs, in the State Journal. Not being accustomed to feeding on the "flapdoodle" which the Salem paper furnishes to the jejune place seekers of its own peculiar little party we confess we had not until now noticed its proposition for the Government to reimburse our State for the money we have expended on our own account and for our own benefit. The Statesman has taken, or assumes to have taken the national finances, as far as Oregon is interested therein, under its exclusive control, and now it comes with a proposition to "relieve the national treasury by requiring it to pay our share of the war debt—a liability which [illegible] and we ourselves agreed to discharge." Can't the Statesman think of some other legislation of a similar kind which needs attention at the special session? For example, shall we ask the General Government to return us an equivalent for the gold which citizens of the United States [illegible] in Oregon and carried away? This would amount to a very nice sum, and without doubt would be an "equitable charge on the United States Treasury."

MAMMOTH DISTRICT.—This district, says the Owyhee Avalanche of November 4th, is located about sixteen miles [illegible] from here, and the largest ledges in this region are found there. We are credibly informed that the great Hayward is between fifteen and twenty feet in width. It was discovered in July last, but no work has been done until recently. John Connor [illegible] brought in rock from this ledge and had a part of it assayed by Chittenden and a part by Willey. The rock assayed came from near the surface, and gave this result per ton: By Chittenden's assay—gold $26 01, silver $6 31. Total $32 32. By Willey—gold, $24 80 4 100, silver, $36 19 20 100. Total, $60 99 24 100. The rock was from different parts of the ledge. The first extension north is called Big Deer Lode, and a test of it by Mr Chittenden gives $101 per ton. This ledge is located on and crosses Boulder Creek, and Col Fogus took up a claim in the bed where it crosses the creek, and has been working it.

CHANGING CITIES.—London is governed and kept clean and in order for $12,000,000 a year. Paris for $10,000,000. New York, they say, costs $17,000,000, but it is not so well governed, but sadly neglected in the [illegible] of cleanliness at a less figure.

NEW HOSE.—Five hundred feet of new leather hose made by F. R. [illegible] for the Portland Fire Department, was tested by No. [illegible] Company on Tuesday evening, giving entire satisfaction.

A WONDERFUL SPECTACLE.—The Chicago Republican, whose editor lately retired from a responsible post in the War Department and is therefore likely to be well informed on the subject, says that the number of soldiers discharged from the military service of the United States within the last four months is probably nearer nine than eight hundred thousand, and adds:

"These men have gone back to swell the productive industry of the country, and to add to its wealth instead of consuming it. So many veteran soldiers were never before set free from the restraints of military discipline with so little social disorder. We have here and there complaints of the perpetration of crimes which had become unusual, but taken as a mass, those three quarters of a million of disbanded soldiers present a sublime unexampled spectacle. They are at work on their farms and in their shops, as peacefully and industriously as though they had never been trained to arms, and never marshalled on the bloodiest of all stricken fields. Having vindicated the unity of their country, they are now engaged just as devotedly and resolutely in the work of increasing its material resources, and developing in a great degree its substantial power."

MOUNT HOOD.—We find the following in the S. F. Call:

Hall's picture of Mount Hood, now on exhibition in the window of Jones, Wooll & Sutherland's frame store, is one of the most poetic pieces of painting we have had the pleasure of seeing for a long time. The view is from the bank of the Willamette about forty five miles from the volcano, and there is more distance expressed in this painting than in any California painting which we remember, not excepting Bierstadt. The sun is just setting, the elk are browsing peacefully on the bank, their figures in fine relief against the quiet mid distance of water. On the right is a clump of cottonwood—on the left, the oak, the brilliancy of the dying leaf contrasting beautifully with the chilly silver white of the majestic, awfully grand object which seems to float in the air like a spirit mountain, rather than one "whose feet are in the foundations of the earth." The natural quiet and repose of the hour is represented to a degree that soothes the gaze, and lingers in the memory after turning to jostle along the unsentimental thoroughfare.

GOV. LYON.—It appears that the Governor of Idaho took the overland route from the East for the capital of his territory. The Union Vedette (Salt Lake) of October 30th, thus speaks of his arrival at that city:

"His Excellency, Caleb Lyon, of Lyonsdale, Governor re-elect of Idaho Territory, arrived here on Saturday, en route to his Territory, to re-enter upon his official labors as Governor and Superintendent of Indian Affairs. The Governor is a thorough-going gentleman and scholar, admirably adapted to the progressive genius of the great Northwest, whose gold fields he hopes ere long to see duly developed, and whose "native tribes" he intends to make behave, by precept, if they will, and by power, if they won't. He is accompanied by his Secretary, Newton Northam, Esq., of New York."

STOP THAT COUGH!—'Tis strange that so many persons otherwise intelligent, will allow a cough or cold to remain day after day, when for 50 cents they can get a bottle of HALL'S PULMONARY BALSAM that will surely relieve it. It is sold by all Druggists.

NEVER FAILS.—Newell's Pulmonary Syrup, the most effective and never failing remedy for all affections of the throat and lungs, is a strictly scientific preparation, containing no deleterious or nauseating drugs, and can be taken with impunity and certainty of relief. Don't be afraid to use it freely for any difficulties of the Chest, either in infant or adult cases.

King Cholera

RESPECTFULLY DEDICATED TO THE CITY FATHERS

A fearful whisper comes from the East
Of a ravaging monster, gaunt and grim,
Making of man a vampire feast,
Highest and lowest, greatest and least—
And all he finds no food for him.

And now westward he holds his way,
Marching with stern, resolute tread,
His victims struggle and weep and pray,
And nought can his terrible hunger stay
Till his path is strewn with thousand dead.

Speak [illegible] and truth and come,
What shall we do? avert his wrath,
Can we not purge our city in time,
With chemical water and quick lime
And leave no place for his hideous path?

Or will our rulers no danger know
Till at our door King Cholera halts,
While dead carts hither and thither go
And the dark air shudders with cries of woe,
And everywhere gape the burial vaults?

Take heed of the warning now—take heed!
While still there is time our homes to save!
For everywhere ripens the poisonous seed
On which King Cholera loves to feed,
That our city may be but a mighty grave!

Cleanse, O Fathers! those gutters and styes,
Festering kennels and filthy slums,
Reeking under the dog-day skies,
For if their stench must still arise—
What shall we do when King Cholera comes?
The late Mrs. Grundy.

Two who Wait

There are sounds that are for remembrance.

I loved Robert as I never could love again. I was an orphan, and friendless. Being quick with my needle I had come to Boston hoping to find work there. Somehow chance favored me—no, I don't mean that—I mean that God who promised to be a father to the fatherless was good to me. I found a comfortable boarding-place, and by means of my landlady, a paying run of custom. I went out by the day to finish off dresses, sewing with dress-makers sometimes, and more often after they had got through and gone away. Robert Eden boarded in the same house with me, and he liked me from the first.

How proud I was of his liking, the handsome manly fellow! He was a clerk in a store, and he got through every night at six o'clock, and often if he could find out where I was sewing, he would come and walk home with me. This was before we were engaged. Afterward, of course, he came every night, as a regular thing. But I never shall forget how it used to be during those first months before he had asked me to marry him. I never quite knew whether he would come or not, so it was something pleasant to think and wonder about as I sat over my work. Then, when I saw that he was really waiting, how shy I used to be, and how demurely I used to walk along with my eyes down until he joined me, and then look up at him as if I were altogether surprised! It was an innocent little deception which harmed no one. I don't know why I speak of it, only sometimes I like to go over all those old days in my thought, and every one of their little memories seems bright and sweet as fresh blossoms.

I had known Robert six months, when one night, instead of going home at once, as usual, he asked me to go out to Mount Auburn with him. The days were at their longest; it was only half past six, and there would be plenty of time for a ramble among those flowery paths before they would shut the gates and leave the dead people to their still night-slumber. I was glad enough to go anywhere with him; and it was very pleasant to get out of town, and spend the long June twilight among country sights and sounds. So we set off at once.

How beautiful it was, walking about in those lovely grounds, with the day just dawning to a close. There were flowers everywhere—flowers growing up joyously, and shaking odor out of their crimson and purple cups upon the still air, emblems of glad, grateful life—and flowers, too, broken from their stems, and laid upon the graves, offerings of love and of memory, to give forth there the sad sweetness of their expiring breath, and then fade, emblems these of death and woe. It was there, among the flowers and the graves, that Robert told me how dearly he had grown to love me, and asked me to belong to him forever. Yes, I remember he said that—belong to him forever. That meant, did it not, through life and through death? Surely it bound me—when I had promised him—for all time, and all eternity as well. It was strange, but in the midst of my great, deep joy, a thought came over me—what if this troth-plighting among the graves were an omen—what if it should be for death and for life? But I tried to banish this foreboding. I knew I was superstitious, naturally, so I would not let myself utter the haunting thought to Robert.

When the time came for the gates to be shut we went out arm in arm, we two who belonged to each other forevermore. We walked about for a while under the trees there in old Cambridge before we went back to town, and the moon poured down on us a flood of silver light. It seemed to us that we had never seen such moonlight—that we walked under new heavens and upon a new earth.

When we got home we told our landlady—good Mrs. Colesworthy, who had been so kind to me—of our betrothal. Robert said frankness was best in such matters, as in all others. We could not be married just yet. His salary was small, and he must save enough to begin housekeeping in a quiet way. In the meantime he would want, of course, to be with me as much as possible, and so it was well our relation should be understood, and then there would be no more room for gossip.

That New Year, however, the firm he worked for raised his salary, so that he saved the money we needed sooner than we had any hope, and we were married the next summer, a year after our betrothal. Then Robert took me home. We had three rooms—a chamber, a kitchen, and a little parlor. We thought of a spare bedroom at first, but I had no friends who were likely to come and see us, neither had Robert; so we saved that expense. What a bright, cheery home we had! How much pride and pleasure we took in every little convenience and adornment! We thought we were just as happy as could be; but when another year went by, and with the June roses came a baby girl to look up at us with her shy sweet eyes, full of strange baby wisdom, we found that we could be happier still. I wanted to call the little thing Rose, because she came when the roses came, and Robert wanted to call her Mary, because that was my name; so we compromised and called her Rosemary.

I think you never saw just such a baby—never, surely, unless you have had a first baby of your own. She was such a round, rosy, fat, dimpled, loving, sunny, bird-like creature, with wise, still ways too, that kept you wondering how the world looked to her, and what she was thinking about. She was a perpetual novelty and entertainment to us. We never tired of speculating about her, fondling her. And seven months went by us most happily, until it was the March after little Rosemary came.

Then Robert took a sudden, violent cold. It came on to rain one day while he was at the store. He had to go out to attend to some business, and having no overshoes or umbrella, went carelessly without them, and came home to me at night so hoarse he could hardly speak. It was his last day's work.

Let me hurry over those few terrible weeks of suffering and suspense through which I nursed him. He died in the last of April. Before he went away from us little Rosemary had learned to say "papa." She said it to him just before he died, and I never can forget the way his face kindled with a lifelike brightness which made me almost hope to hold him back a little longer from death. He reached out his arms, those thin, weak arms, and I laid the child in them.

"God bless you," he said, "my darling, my little darling! God bless you, and keep you from all evil!"

Then he began to cough, and I took her away, and tied her into her tiny rocking chair, where she had learned to sit patiently hour after hour, never troubling any one. When the coughing spell was over he closed his eyes, and I heard him say in a low voice:

"Their angels do always behold the face of my Father," and knew he was thinking of his little one, and what her lot would be when he was gone.

Just at the last he turned his eyes to me, and said in weak, faint tones:

"You have been my true wife, Mary. You have walked with me down to the very brink of the river. You must go back alone."

With those words he made a sign for me to kiss him, and bending down I pressed my lips to his, that even then quivered beneath my touch, and faintly returned my pressure. When I lifted up my head he was dead.

I had been alone a month before I had courage to look about me, or think at all what I was going to do. The firm had been very kind. They continued Robert's pay through his sickness, and for two months afterward, making up half the year. Of course that was all I could have expected of them, and more—I must take care of myself and my little girl. Robert had left a little money, but that I did not mean to touch. I felt that it ought to remain as a provision against any time of peculiar need, or for Rosemary if I should die. So I went round among my old customers and procured the promise of as much work as I could do to take home, for it was of course out of the question to leave my child and go out all day, as I used to do. When I saw how kind they all were to me, and how sorry for me, I began to realize how many good hearts there are in the world.

For two years I got along nicely. To be sure it [illegible] an awful [illegible] in my life to take Robert [illegible]; but I remembered I had promised to belong to him forever, so I felt I was only waiting. My little one was a great comfort. She looked at me with her father's eyes, and there was a curious likeness in her words and ways to his, which sometimes gladdened and sometimes saddened my heart.

Her constitution was very frail. She had been a fat dimpled baby, but after she could run alone she grew slender, and her skin was almost transparent. But she was never really ill until the summer two years after her father died. Then she became so delicate that she required a great deal of my time. I thought at first it was because she was cutting a long delayed tooth; but at length, [illegible] I began to fear there was graver cause for alarm. I sent for a doctor, a kind, fatherly man. Dr. Grant his name was—and he told me her spine was affected, and the disease was of such a nature that she would require the closest care and attention to save her life. And even then—

But he did not finish the sentence. Looking into my face I think he could not nerve himself to [illegible].

I used to hold her in my arms more than half the time by night and by day. Of course I could not sew much, and the money Robert had left dwindled away. I began to wonder how I could keep want from the door. One day Dr. Grant came and seemed to have something in particular to say. He had been very kind to my little Rosemary, and she and I had both grown fond of him. But I never could tell the shock it was when he asked me to marry him. I had known nothing of his history hitherto, but he told me now that he was a widower, and a lonely childless man, and that he had learned to love me and mine better than anything in this world. He wanted to marry me at once, and take us home with him, where Rosemary could have every care and luxury, and where my lot should be eased of all such burdens as he could bear in my stead.

While he talked I was terribly tempted. The home he offered seemed to promise such rest, such relief from care, and the torturing anxiety how to do my duty to my child and get my daily bread at the same time. I thought of my little one most of all. I knew she needed so much that I could not give her. Perhaps it would save her life. Had I a right to refuse? And yet I knew I did not love Dr. Grant. I could not answer him on any momentary impulse. So I told him if he would go away and give me time to think I would see him again on the morrow. He held my hand a moment with grave tenderness.

"Remember, Mrs. Eden," he said, "that whatever way you may decide I shall not be the less your friend. If you can find it in your heart to come to my house and let me care for you I shall be happy, indeed, and I will do my best to make you so."

All that night, until the gray dawn lightened the heavens, I sat holding the little one in my arms and thinking. I went over and over all the advantages of the case: most of all what it would do for Rosemary to be in a home of plenty, surrounded with every appliance of ease and luxury, constantly watched, moreover, by a kind and skillful physician, whose interest in her, I knew, would be only second to mine. All this on one side.

On the other the stern fact that I did not love Dr. Grant—the holy, ever-present memory that I had promised to belong to Robert Eden forever. Could I break that vow? Would he forgive it, even for his child's sake, if I suffered any other man to press the lips on which his dying kiss still lingered?

Then I thought further. Filled as my heart was with fond memories of the dead, thrilling to that remembered love as it never would to the strongest utterances of any living man's passion, should I not be wronging Dr. Grant's noble nature if I gave him a hand which held no heart—vowed a fealty which was only lip deep? At last, just in the gray dawning, I made up my mind that I would be faithful and true at any cost, and trust all to God, even Rosemary. I would not sin against my womanhood by purchasing comforts for her at the price of my fidelity to the vow I had plighted to her father. I knew that I had decided rightly by the great peace which flowed into my heart. I lay down on the bed, with my little girl still in my arms, and I seemed to feel—was it all fancy?—the presence of one I could not see, to hear a well-known, well-loved voice murmur—

"Through life and through death! My beloved, thou hast been faithful!"

Then I slept the long, deep sleep of exhaustion and when I awoke Rosemary was watching me with her great wide open eyes, and it was almost time for Dr. Grant to come.

I showed him honestly all my heart, and, when he understood fully that I never could have given him such love as he craved, he told me I had done right—that any other course would have been an injustice to myself, to him and to the dead. But if I could not be his wife, he said I must be to him as his sister—I must suffer him to provide for all my necessities, for he should not let me sew any more until—he stopped an instant, and then finished his sentence—until the little girl is better.

But, in spite of his attempt to spare my feelings, it struck in one moment to my heart he felt convinced she would never be any better in this world. With that thought all my independence, all my sensitive pride, was silenced. I felt as willing to accept the help he offered as I was grateful for his kindness. I could not give one hour more of my darling's short life to anything but care of her. I knew he wanted to assist me—was alike willing and able. I took his generous hand and raised it to my lips.

"May God reward you!" I said. "I know I never can, and yet I accept your offering as frankly as it is made."

So all the rest of that summer I tended my poor, little fading flower, and Dr. Grant supplied our wants like a brother. What days those were!—those long, still ones, in which I held her from morning till night, clasped in arms which never wearied of their burden! A strange, almost unnatural wisdom seemed to develop in the little three-years' child who was living her short life so fast. I had long talks with her about death and heaven, the home where her father waited—where she, too, would be waiting for me very soon.

At last the end came. She had been growing more like an angel every day, and at length the angels called her home. Her little arms clasped my neck for the last time—her lips pressed mine—and her baby voice bade me good by. My darling, oh my darling!

She has slept these two years beside her father. I am looking forward always through all the tumult of life to the day when I too can go home. I bear life's burden patiently—I try to do my duty in the station to which it has pleased God to call me, but my heart and my hopes are where Robert waits, and with him my little Rosemary. I am not sure, I think, that heaven is heaven until I join them there.

Grease for Leather.—In smearing leather with oil, we aim not only at making the leather pliant, but also at making it water-proof. Train oil is often used for this purpose, but no fat gives more imperfect results, for while no liquid fat is suited to render leather permanently water proof, train oil possesses this characteristic, that after a while it dries up, and then the leather becomes brittle. Hog's lard is admirably adapted to secure both objects, pliability and impermeability to water. It renders the leather perfectly pliant and no water can penetrate it. It is especially suitable for greasing boots and shoes, but in the summer season an eighth part of tallow should be mixed with it. It should be laid on when in a melted condition, but no warmer than one's finger dipped in the mass can bear. When it is first applied to a boot or shoe, the leather should be previously soaked in water that it may swell up, so that the pores can open well and thoroughly absorb the lard. The liquid lard should be smeared over the article to be water proofed, at least three or four times, and sole leather oftener still. Afterward the lard remaining visible on the outside should be wiped off with a rag. By this means you may have a water proof boot or shoe, without the annoyance caused by most stuffs, of penetrating the leather and greasing the stockings. An occasional coating of hog's lard is also recommended for patent leather boots and shoes, as it prevents the leather from cracking, and if it be not rubbed in too strongly, the leather will shine just as well after the grease has been applied.

A Good Deal for the President but Not Much for Johnson.—It must not be forgotten that every Democratic leader, now loud for Andrew Johnson, was indifferent to his patriotic courage in December of 1860, indignant at his attack on Breckinridge and Lane in 1861, laughed at his sufferings as a refugee and opposed his appointment as Military Governor of Tennessee in 1861-62, denounced his tyranny and called him an ingrate in 1862, voted against him in 1864, slandered him in 1865, and now proclaims himself in favor of Andrew Johnson's restoration or reconstruction plan without ever having done anything, but assail all the other portions of his policy, including emancipation, confiscation, suspension of the writ of habeas corpus, military arrests, military trials, execution of the assassins, and the support of radicals like Holt, Stanton and Williams, Brownlow of Tennessee.—Philadelphia Press.

The laws of nature are just but terrible. There is no weak mercy in them. Cause and consequence are inseparable. The elements have no forbearance. The fire burns, the water drowns, the air consumes, the earth buries. And perhaps it would be well for our race if the punishment of crime against the law of man were as inevitable as the punishment of crime against the laws of Nature—were man as unerring in his judgment as Nature.

Moist Potatoes all Summer.—We have always found this method the best to keep potatoes in a crisp, mealy condition after warm weather comes on. Vegetables like animals feel the [illegible] of nature when the particular season arrives for them to act, in order to perpetuate their kind. Put it where you will, in the dark or in the light, if the potato has a little warmth and moisture it will send out its bud and shoot and the root will follow it, if it can find but a little dust on the floor or rock to cling to. The potato then undergoes an important change, the sprouts start and it becomes a waxy, watery thing hardly fit to eat. The following mode of preserving them in a good condition has been described by Dr. J. M. Wilson, [illegible]. The experiment is so cheap and easy that we presume many persons will test it in Spring. It is as follows: Diluted ammonia water in the proportion of an ounce of the liquor of ammonia of the druggist to a pint of river or rain water, has of late years been successfully employed for checking the vegetative power of potatoes, and prolonging their suitableness for food. Potatoes immersed four or five days in this liquid retain all their edible properties unimpaired for a twelvemonth, improved in flavor and mealiness. The effect of the liquor is to consolidate their substance and extract their moisture. After immersion the potatoes should be spread out to dry, and will then keep good for ten months, contributing in this way not only to the [illegible] of families, but also to the health of mariners exposed to long voyages at sea.

Do not Pasture the Mowing Lots.—At least do not allow your cattle to eat them down close or you will have a poor yield next year. Feed your cows cabbages, turnips, sowed corn, carrot tops and carrots, if your pastures are short, or whether they are or not; but spare the meadows, or only permit the best of the aftermath to be eaten off. Just before a heavy rain, dress the meadow with 100 lbs. to the acre of superphosphate, mixed with four times its bulk of muck, peat, pitch, scrapings, charcoal dust or loam; this will make the grass grow, and repay you "some thirty, some sixty, and some an hundred fold" next mowing season. It is far better to mow only five acres where you get three tons of grass to the acre than to mow fifteen acres, cutting but one ton of grass each, or thirty acres averaging but half a ton of hay to the acre.

Coating Wood.—A method of coating wood with varnish hard as stone has been recently introduced into Germany. The ingredients are forty parts of chalk, forty of rosin, four of linseed oil, to be melted together in an iron pot. One part of native oxide of copper, and one of sulphuric acid are then to be added, after which the composition is ready for use. It is applied hot to the wood with a brush, in the same way as paint, and, as before observed, becomes exceedingly hard on drying.

The New York Ledger had a column article about "the great want of Democracy." We can tell its great want in one word—Votes.

A discount of five per cent. will be allowed on all amounts paid before the expiration of ten days. Any Stock on which said assessment shall remain unpaid on the 20th day of November next will be advertised on that day as delinquent, and unless payment shall be made before, will be sold on the 20th day of December, 1865, to pay the delinquent assessment, together with costs of advertising and expenses of sale.

Diseases of the Throat, Bronchitis, Pains and Oppression of the Chest and Lungs, Difficult Breathing and all the Diseases of the Pulmonary Organs.

ITS ACTION IS EXPECTORANT, ALTERATIVE, SUDORIFIC, SEDATIVE, DIAPHORETIC AND DIURETIC, which renders it one of the most valuable remedies known for curing diseases of the lungs. Such is the immediate and satisfactory effect, that it is WARRANTED TO BREAK UP THE MOST DISTRESSING COUGH IN A FEW HOURS' TIME, if not of too long standing. IT IS WARRANTED to give entire satisfaction even in the MOST CONFIRMED CASES OF CONSUMPTION. IT IS WARRANTED NOT to produce costiveness (which is the case with most remedies) or affect the head, as it contains no Opium in any form. IT IS WARRANTED TO BE PERFECTLY HARMLESS to the most delicate child, although it is an active and powerful remedy for restoring the system.
